STRUCTURE OF THE QUESTIONNAIRE SPECIFICATION

All questions in the specification are laid out using the same format.

Example of question layout

Some questions (for instance USUWRKM) have a main group routed to them, but subsets of this group are asked variations of the question. In such cases the main routing is at the foot of the question as usual, and the subsets are listed separately above it, with the individual aspect of the routing indented slightly from the left of the page.

The appearance of brackets in the specification usually denotes a form of text substitution (alternative question wording depending upon the respondent's earlier answers); carried out either by the BLAISE computer package or else by the interviewer, during the questionnaire. Square brackets are used in instances in which information is automatically inserted into a question by the computer package. Round brackets () are used in instances in which the interviewer may or may not wish to add something in order to assist the flow of the interview.

Over the page is a summary of the terms appearing in this right hand column, and elsewhere in the questionnaire.

STRUCTURE OF THE QUESTIONNAIRE SPECIFICATION

All questions in the specification are laid out using the same format.

Example of question layout

Some questions (for instance NDTYPEUSUWRKM) have a main group routed to them, but subsets of this group are asked variations of the question. In such cases the main routing is at the foot of the question as usual, and the subsets are listed separately above it, with the individual aspect of the routing indented slightly from the left of the page.

The appearance of brackets in the specification usually denotes a form of text substitution (alternative question wording depending upon the respondent's earlier answers); carried out either by the BLAISE computer package or else by the interviewer, during the questionnaire. Square brackets are used in instances in which information is automatically inserted into a question by the computer package. Round brackets () are used in instances in which the interviewer may or may not wish to add something in order to assist the flow of the interview.

Over the page is a summary of the terms appearing in this right hand column, and elsewhere in the questionnaire.

2004 Quarterly LFS Results: Attainment Estimates

Introduction

1. In Spring 2004 changes were made to the qualifications section of the LFS questionnaire in order to provide more detailed information on the attainment of GCSEs. These changes had unanticipated impacts which, if ignored, would affect our estimates of changes in achievement at level 2. Users were made aware of the unreliability of some of the qualification variables and were cautioned against using them. This note describes how we have adjusted the estimates of attainment for Spring 2004 and subsequent quarters in 2004 to take account of the changes and informs users of the revisions to the 2004 datasets issued by ONS.

Background

2. The changes to the qualification questions affected the estimates of highest qualifications attained in two ways. First, ONS standard procedures meant that not all information on qualifications was brought forward from the previous quarter for sample members who could not be contacted in the Spring survey. This reduced the number of level 2 achievers but only affects the Spring figures.

3. Second, in order to obtain more detail on GCSE passes at Grade C and above, the number of response categories in the question asking about how many GCSE A*-C respondents hold was increased. The previous version of the "GCSE" question asks those with good GCSEs, O Levels and CSE Grade1s whether the number of such qualifications they hold is 'fewer than 5' or '5 or more'. The Spring 04 questionnaire split the first of these categories into '1-2' and '3-4'. The unanticipated outcome was that the new question on GCSEs had much higher proportion of don't knows than the previous versions. Because of the way that 'don't knows' are treated in the derivation of highest qualification the net effects were that the changes to the GCSE question increased the estimated number of Level 2 achievers. This effect is apparent in all of the 2004 quarters datasets.

4. To produce estimates for Spring 2004 that are consistent with those for earlier quarters we have adjusted the way that the responses to the changed questions were handled. Steven McIntosh (Centre for Economic Performance, LSE) was appointed as an advisor to assist in determining the most appropriate method of adjusting the LFS estimates on attainment. The adjustments address both issues identified above.

Adjustments

Imputation

5. The first adjustment - carrying forward responses from Winter 2003 to Spring 2004 - was necessary because data was missing from NUMOL4 (Spring 2004) since the rotation from NUMOL (Winter 2003) was only partial; i.e. respondents reporting fewer than 5 good GCSEs in Winter could not be allocated to a value in NUMOL4. Consequently, any derived variables involving NUMOL4, such as HIQUAL4 will be based on incomplete information. Similarly for GCSEFUL(1-5). Our solution was to bring forward highest qualification data for those not contacted in Spring. This took a top down approach rather than bottom up. It means that the solution centred on ensuring that derived variables (DV) such as HIQUAL4 had been properly imputed, rather than correcting all the variables that feed into HIQUAL4 and re-deriving the DV from scratch.

GCSE Adjustment

6. The new question on GCSE attainment showed an increase in the number of reported 'don't knows'. In the current methodology for producing estimates of level 2 attainment, those responding 'don't know' are reapportioned to having '5 or more', or 'less than 5 GCSEs' according to the proportions in these groups for those giving an answer to the question. Our analysis showed that almost all of the increase in the number of 'don't knows' came from those who would have said 'fewer than 5' in the previous version of the question.

7. In the old version of the question the proportion of 'don't know's varied across different sample sub-groups and this was taken into account in our adjustments. Using GCSE attainment data from the previous year's annual local labour force survey (2003/04), segmentation analysis was used to allocate people into groups according to their propensity to give a don't know response. For each of these groups we calculated the ratio of the estimated numbers with 5 or more good GCSEs to the reported number with 5 or more. This gives an uplift factor that could be applied to the 2004 quarterly results.

8. This second adjustment, which applied the uplift factors to correct the discontinuity arising from increased don't know responses, used the now fully rotated NUMOL4 to estimate GCSE attainment for the segmentation groups. The adjustments on GCSE attainment were in turn fed into the calculations on wider attainment to provide estimates on overall attainment at level 2 and above.

Reissue of datasets

9. The revised 2004 quarterly datasets include the additional adjusted qualifications variables which take account of the incomplete imputation in Spring 2004 and the increase in don't knows in the GCSE question. These are the variables that should now be used in any analysis looking at GCSE attainment and wider attainment in the population. The table in Annex A2 gives details of the new variables which appear in each of the 2004 datasets.

A3. Use of the num5up variable

For every record on the 2004 LFS datasets for which either NUMOLIMPUTED or NUMOL4 = 2 (more than 5 passes at GCSE A*-C) there is also a value for NUM5UP. Values for NUM5UP fall within the range 1.0 to 1.12.

For any group of interest simply summing the values for NUM5UP will create an estimate of the total numbers holding 5 or more GCSEs at A*-C that will be consistent with previous NUMOL estimates from Spring 1994 to Winter 2003.

These numbers can be combined with total numbers holding any GCSEs at A*-C from either NUMOLIMPUTED or NUMOL4 to calculate the proportion of all GCSE A*-C holders who have 5 or more (and thus are qualified to Level 2 by virtue of their GCSEs). An example would be : for those of working age in UK (Autumn 04) for whom GCSE is their highest qualification:
