SOC2000 - The use of trailing zeroes

When SOC 1990 was revised to produce SOC2000, one of the changes made to the Standard Occupational Classification numbering system was to give the use of the trailing zero a particular meaning. This matched the convention used in the International Standard Classification of Occupations, ISCO 88.

Where a unit group is the only one within a minor group, its code number ends with a zero, for example:

Minor group 415 Administrative occupations: general Unit group 4150 General office assistants/clerks

However where a minor group has more than one unit group, the zero is not used.

Minor group 414 Administrative occupations: communications

Unit group 4141 Telephonists

Unit group 4142 Communication operators

A last digit, or trailing zero is used to indicate that there is only one unit group within the minor group or that coding could not be achieved at the more detailed level.

For instance, the use of code 4140 would indicate that the response could be coded to the minor group 414 but that there was insufficient information to assign one of the unit group codes 4141 or 4142. Using a zero in this way is rare. One major disadvantage is that the derivation of the National Statistics Socio-economic Classification needs the official four digit unit group code. Another disadvantage is that tables with counts at all levels of the occupation classification would require extra rows for codes such as 4140. If those records given code 4140 were included in the total for minor group 414, this figure would be greater than the sum of counts for unit groups 4141 and 4142.

SOC2000 - The use of trailing digit '9'

Within each level of the classification, the trailing digit '9' is reserved for occupations 'not elsewhere classified'. At the unit group level, these 'n.e.c.' groups contain a mix of occupations, each of which is not found in sufficient numbers to merit its own unit group.
