INTRODUCTION

BACKGROUND

A survey on attitudes to the British general election of October 1974 was conducted with a panel of respondents who had previously been interviewed after the February 1974 election. A special sample of Scottish voters was interviewed at the same time, though they had not previously been interviewed. The study was sponsored by the British Election Study at the University of Essex, which was funded by the Social Science Research Council, SSRC Grant HR 2793/1. Social and Community Planning Research was invited to conduct the fieldwork stage of the study, all other stages were undertaken by the researchers in the British Election Study team. This report describes the technical aspects of the survey, including the sample, coding and questionnaire design for which the British Election Study team were responsible, and the fieldwork for which SCPR and the Centre for Sample Surveys Ltd were responsible

This study is the seventh in the chain of SSRC funded research studies of British general elections begun by David Butler and Donald Stokes at Nuffield College, Oxford in 1963. The panel design of these studies has been similar to that used successfully since 1956 in the United States of America in studies of electoral behaviour. Butler and Stokes completed the first study in 1966 after three waves of interviewing in 1963, after the 1964 general election, and after the 1966 general election. Their book Political Change in Britain. forces shaping electoral choice was published in 1969*, in it the sample design, the methodology and questionnaire are discussed. Butler and Stokes then began a second study with a similar design, interviewing a fresh panel in 1969 and after the general election of June 1970. The results of this second panel have been included in the second edition of Political Change in Britain published in 1975.

In February 1974 the responsibility for the conduct and administration of these studies was transferred to the University of Essex. After the February 1974 general election, the British Election Study team conducted both a reinterview survey with the Butler & Stokes panel of 1969/70⁴, and a complementary survey of a fresh sample of electors throughout Great Britain⁵. After the October 1974 election this sample was reinterviewed and at the same time a special sample of Scottish electors was selected and interviewed for the first time. So far the results of the 1974 surveys have been discussed only in articles and conference papers⁶. A book will be published by Cambridge University Press in 1976

SAMPLING DESIGN AND SAMPLING ERRORS

The study consisted of two surveys, the first among a panel of respondents in 200 constituencies throughout Great Britain, South of the Caledonian canal - the British cross-section sample. The second survey consisted of a special sample of Scottish electors - the Scottish booster sample

THE BRITISH CROSS-SECTION SAMPLE

In February 1974, 200 parliamentary constituencies were selected with probability proportionate to size of 1973 electorate, from a list of 618 constituencies throughout Great Britain (excluding Northern Ireland, and constituencies north of the Caledonian Canal). The sampling frame was constructed as follows.

- 1) All 618 constituencies were classified into 11 regional strata, using the Registrar General's Standard Region definitions, and treating Greater London as a separate region,
- 2) Within these strata, constituencies were divided into three groups, those in conurbations, those in urban areas, and those in rural areas, according to the proportion of that constituency's population that lived in each of these types of local authority areas (In the appendix we include a fuller description of these local authority area definitions) Where some of the constituency is in an urban and some in a rural local authority area, constituency area type is determined by the area type in which the majority of the population lives.

Because there are no conurbations in five of the regional strata (East Midlands, East Anglia, South East, South West and Wales), and because, by definition, all Greater London constituencies are in a conurbation, this classification gives 26 strata.

3) Finally, the constituencies in these 26 strata were arranged in descending order of the percentage of the Labour vote at the 1970 general election. In constituencies whose boundaries were new or had been revised following the Boundary Commission's Reports, the area containing the greater proportion of the population was used to estimate the ordering parameter.

From this list of 618 constituencies, 200 constituencies were selected systematically within regional group, with probability proportionate to the size of the 1973 electorate. A sampling fraction was derived by totalling the electorates of all constituencies in the regional group and by dividing that accumulated electorate by the number of sampling points required for that regional group. A random number between 1 and the sampling fraction was chosen to give the first constituency. The sampling fraction was added to the random number, and the total indicated the second selected constituency. Subsequent constituencies were selected by adding the sampling fraction to this running total, until the correct number of constituencies was selected. A random number was selected for each regional group. In this way a sample was selected giving a number of constituencies in each stratum in proportion to the proportion of all electors lying in that stratum

Within each of the 200 selected constituencies, one polling district was selected. With probability proportionate to size. Polling districts were listed in electoral register order, and a random number between 1 and the accumulated 1974 electorate for that constituency was taken to indicate the chosen polling district. This yielded a set of 200 polling districts as sampling units.

For the February 1974 study, individual electors were drawn within each polling district, in each case using a random start point and sampling fraction necessary to generate 17 names. Where the sampling interval alighted on a 'Y-voter', the name was recorded and the individual was replaced if his/her birthday was after February 28 (the day of the general election). This gave a sample of 3400 electors, representative of the eligible electorate on February 28, 1974.

The October 1974 sample was an updated version of the February one To update it, four further names were selected in each of the 200 polling districts, by using a random start point and deriving the appropriate sampling interval. The original 17 names were not replaced. Where a previously excluded Y-voter had come of age by October 10, his/her name was included and only three extra names selected in that sampling point. Any ineligible Y-voters encountered in the process of adding names were replaced by a supplementary name drawn completely at random. The updating process added 800 names to the February sample. Thirty-two of these were Y-voters, with birthdays between February 28 and October 10 In all 4,200 names were provided in 200 polling districts.

In the February 1974 survey contact had been attempted with 3,400 electors, 2,462 were successfully interviewed, and 938 for various reasons were not. In generating the effective sample for the October study, the reasons for the non-response of these 938 electors were studied, and individuals with whom it was felt no interview was possible were excluded from the sample Reasons for exclusion included ascertained death, impossible to trace, refusal to be interviewed on at least two occasions, and so on. 789 individuals were thus excluded, leaving 149 names for issue in the October sample

In summary, the issued sample in October was made up of four groups of individuals which were

- 2,462 electors who had been interviewed in March-May ('A' series),
- 768 electors whose names had been freshly drawn for October ('B' series),
- 3) 32 electors whose names had been drawn in February when they were too young to vote, but who had come of age before October 10 ('B' series),
- 4) 149 electors whose names had been drawn in February, who had not been interviewed then, but who might be available in October ('B' series)

This gave an effective sample of 3,411 electors in 200 constituencies Different questionnaires were used for the 'A' and 'B' series, which are described in section 3. The actual number of electors issued at each point is given in appendix 3.

THE SCOTTISH BOOSTER SAMPLE

To avoid having to draw a sample of constituencies and polling districts in Scotland independent of the Scottish part of the British cross-section sample, a sample design was sought that would allow the latter to provide data for both the British cross-section sample and for a Scottish cross-section sample, even if the data had to be weighted. The design adopted was as follows

- 1) All 71 Scottish constituencies (including those north of the Caledonian canal) were divided into three main strata, according to area type 'Conurbation' constituencies included those 20 contiguous constituencies forming the Clyside conurbation 'Rural' constituencies were those 20 that lacked a substantial urban settlement. The remaining 31 constituencies were treated as 'urban'.
- 2) The 'conurbation' and 'rural' constituencies were then each divided into two strata according to the relative strength of the Labour vote at the February 1974 election. The urban constituencies were divided into three groups using the same criterion.
- 3) Within each of the seven strata, constituencies were listed in order of the proportion voting Liberal or Nationalist at the previous election Electorates were accumulated within each stratum and a sampling interval calculated so as to provide five constituencies per stratum. A start point was selected such that all Scottish constituencies already in the British cross-section sample were included in this booster sample. Constituencies were then drawn with probability proportionate to size

The selected 34 constituencies consisted of 18 constituencies in the British cross-section sample and 17 new constituencies. In the original 18 constituencies, the ward containing the polling district sampled in February was used as a base, and a second polling district in that ward was chosen with probability proportionate to size. In the 17 added constituencies a ward was selected and then two polling districts within it were selected with probability proportionate to size. A set of 70 secondary sampling units was derived, 18 of which lay in the British cross-section sample. 1,390 electors were chosen, by selecting five further names at random in the 18 polling districts belonging to the cross-section sample, and 25 names at random in the other 52 polling districts. These electors were asked a 'C' series questionnaire described in section 3

In summary the effective overall sample in Scotland was 1,704 electors

- 234 electors who had been interviewed in March-May ('A' series)
- 2) 72 electors whose names had been freshly drawn for October as part of the British cross-section sample ('B' series)
- 3) I elector whose name had been drawn in February, but who was too young to vote then, but who had come of age before October 10, 1974 ('B' series)
- 4) 7 electors whose names had been drawn in February, who had not been interviewed then, but who might have been available in October ('B' series)
- 5) 1,390 electors of the Scottish booster sample ('C' series)

A list of the sampling points within the seven strata, and the number of names issued at each is given in appendix 3.

Because the seven strata contained different numbers of electors, and because an equal number of constituencies was selected in each, the final sample design was a disproportionate stratified, clustered sample Weights needed to be applied to offset the effect of different sampling fractions in drawing primary sampling points in each of the seven master strata, and weights are also required to compensate for differing probabilities of selection between the two types of polling districts described. The stratum weights used are

Stratum	n	Weight

Conurbation,	group 2	0 908
Urban, group	1	1.051
Urban, group	2	1 259

Rural, group	1	0 837

SAMPLE ISSUE SHEETS

Colour coding was used in this study to reduce the risk of confusion about which sample or series each person belonged to. The names, addresses and serial numbers of 'A' series electors were written on white sample issue sheets, 'B' series electors names and addresses and serial numbers were written on pink sample issue sheets, and 'C' series electors names, etc., were recorded on blue sample issue sheets. These sample issue sheets were then sent to interviewers working on the study. Copies of these sample issue sheets appear in the appendix

SAMPLING ERRORS

The British cross-section sample is a self-weighting, multi-stage stratified sample. It is well known that the sampling variances of ratio estimates from such a clustered sample may be (but need not be) larger than the sampling variances of similar ratio estimates from a simple random sample of equal size. The ratio of these sampling variances is known as the design effect, i.e.

$$deff = \frac{var(\bar{x}_c)}{var(\bar{x})}$$ where $var(\bar{x}_c)$ is the sampling variance of a ratio estimate \bar{x} from a clustered sample of size n and $var(\bar{x})$ is the sampling variance of a ratio estimate \bar{x} from a simple random sample of size n.

Where \bar{x} is a proportion between 0 and 1, 95% confidence limits for \bar{x} may be calculated (if \bar{x} is based on the full sample size by taking

The design effect is primarily a correction for undue homogeneity of responses or characteristics within clusters—the more homogeneous the cluster, the less efficient the sample is for estimation purposes. Since the design effect varies not just with the value of the ratio estimate, but also with the distribution of individual responses over clusters (i e similar proportions may have different design effects attached to them owing to different distributions of the characteristic measured), the calculation of all design effects would be tedious. In this section we therefore provide a selection of the sorts of design effects that attach to variables generated from the questionnaires.

The ratio estimates for which we provide design effects will be simple proportions of the form

 is 1, if the respondent has characteristic $x_1 = \frac{\sum_{i=1}^{N} x_i}{N}$ X, and 0 otherwise, and N is sample size. (This form presumes an unweighted sample.)

The variance of such a ratio estimate is calculated by taking

Where N $_{\mbox{\scriptsize ha}}$ is the number of element in the a $^{\mbox{\scriptsize th}}$ primary sampling unit within the h $^{\mbox{\scriptsize th}}$ stratum

$$x_{ha} = \sum_{i=1}^{N_{ha}} x_{hai}$$

 \mathbf{M}_{h} is the number of primary sampling units in the \mathbf{h}^{th} stratum

$$x_h = \sum_{a=1}^{M_h} \sum_{i=1}^{N_{ha}} x_{hai}$$

L is the total number of strata and f is the sampling fraction

In calculating these effects, we cannot take account of effects attributable to use of electoral registers for systematically drawing names, or of the final ordering by percentage Labour vote (this would yield only one primary sampling unit per stratum). Hence these design effects reflect the effects attributable to selecting polling districts within a sampling frame stratified by region and by the trichotomy conurbation/urban/rural. stratification yields in principle 33 strata, of which in practice seven are empty (the strata (East Midlands, conurbation), (East Anglia, conurbation), (South East, conurbation), (Greater London, urban), (Greater London, rural), (Southwest, conurbation) and (Wales, conurbation)) and a further three contain only one element (North West, rural), (Yorkshire & Humberside, rural), and (West Midlands, rural). For calculation, the latter three primary sampling units were merged with the primary sampling units of the urban stratum of each region. Hence the calculations are taken over 23 strata. Cases where data were not ascertained (or "don't knows" where appropriate) were excluded from the calculations. The data used in making these calculations are taken from the results of the February 1974 election study.

3. THE QUESTIONNAIRE

THE PREPARATION

Three largely precoded questionnaires were used in the study, 'A', 'B' and 'C' series corresponding to the three groups of electors in the sample, the panel, the update, and the Scottish booster sample. The front page of each series was on the same coloured paper as the appropriate sample issue sheets - white for 'A' series, pink for 'B' series and blue for 'C' series questionnaires. Each person in the sample had to answer a specific series questionnaire according to whether he was 'A', 'B' or 'C' series sample

The design of these questionnaires were similar, being modelled on the design of the questionnaire used in the February 1974 study Many of the questions were the same in all three questionnaires and where they were they were given the same question number. No piloting was needed, since most of the questions had been included and piloted before the earlier survey among some 24 respondents. The pilot interviews were conducted by members of the British Election Study team.

THE FORMAT AND LAYOUT

The questionnaires were typed by the British Election Study team in their own format, which differs from many social research questionnaires in key respects. First, the code numbers equivalent to each answer, which are circled by the interviewer to record the respondent's answer, do not appear to the right of the answer on the right hand side of the page, but are printed in the left hand margin beside the answers. Below the standard SCPR format is compared to the British Election Study format

1 British Election Study format

This example also shows another innovation in the British Election Study format, the inclusion of a specific COMMENTS space. Respondents often embellish their answers, add comments, or give detailed explanation of their views, even when answers are precoded. Interviewers were asked to record respondents' comments when they felt that they added to the respondents' choice of precoded answer.

The third departure from the usual SCPR house style was in the filter or skip instructions. The standard SCPR style, similar to many other house syles, is to include an instruction in the right hand margin signalling a skip, and to reinforce this with a heading over the next appropriate question describing who is to be asked the question. The British Election Study style signalled a skip with an arrow to the left of the code and an instruction to the right of the answer, reinforced with a filter heading over the next appropriate question.

Would you call yourself a very strong Conservative, fairly strong, or not very strong?

The filter or skip cues were reinforced by the variation in the horizontal lines between questions A double line concluded any question after which interviewers were to skip to a later question, not the next, whatever the answer. A hatched line on the other hand meant that an instruction given at the first question applied to all the subsequent ones, until a single solid line appeared. This was used in particular when the same show card was shown to respondents at each of a series of questions (for instance, 26A-J inclusive)

Finally, column numbers were not, as on many precoded questionnaires, attributed to each question. Instead simple italicisted instructions appeared in the left hand margin at the bottom of the page so that card-punch operatives could check that they had punched answers in the correct columns. Two rules - one punch per column, and one column per question - simplified their punching task

SHOW CARDS

Like many questionnaires, the British Election ones required interviewers to show respondents cards at certain points in the interview The cards showed all the acceptable answers that could be given to the question. Since most questions did not have a wide range of possible answers, the cards were used only where it was felt that some respondents might forget some of the possible answers. The answers on the card were given the same code numbers as the answers on the questionnaires. No changes to the order of answers on the cards were made, and only one version of the cards was used. One series of questions used a scaling technique similar to the semantic differential (Qll) about the three political parties. A special set of cards was used in the series where the scale was printed horizontally rather than vertically as nappened with most other show cards. An example of the two types is.

THE FEBRUARY AND OCTOBER QUESTIONNAIRES

The questionnaires used in both surveys included a number of questions that had been asked first in earlier Butler and Stokes surveys. But the design was the responsibility of the researchers of the British Election Study at the University of Essex. Three versions of the questionnaire were used. Series 'A' respondents, who had been interviewed in the February study, were given the shortest version, lasting on average 65 minutes. Series 'B' respondents, who had not been interviewed early in the year, but who had been chosen to supplement the British cross-section sample were asked to answer the longest questionnaire, lasting about 90 minutes. The special Scottish booster sample respondents had a questionnaire very similar to the 'B' series questionnaire but including a small number of special questions on Scottish issues and excluding certain other issues questions.

The 'B' series questionnaire began with a short section of questions about newspaper readership, politics and the media, respondents were also asked whether they believed the October election campaign had generally given people the facts about the British situation (questions 1-5) All these questions had been asked in the February questionnaire (and in the case of the media questions were not repeated in series 'A')

The next section, in all October versions, consisted of open-ended questions probing respondents' likes and dislikes among the major political parties, including the Scottish National Party in Scotland (questions 6-10e). The section had been enlarged since February to include the Liberal and Scottish National Parties (questions 9, 10) for the first time. The third section shared by 'A' and 'B' series only, and similar to a section in the February questionnaire, asked respondents to rate the three parties on eight semantic differential type scales. In February the two major parties had been rated on seven of the eight scales. Two open-ended questions on the expected outcomes of the election (questions 12a and b) followed the scales, appearing in all questionnaires in February and October

Respondents were then asked to answer one question on interest in politics (question 13) followed by a series of 12 questions on major issues (questions 14-25) Ten issues were covered in the section (twelve in 'C' series questionnaire including questions 26K-T), compared with eleven in February, some new issues were covered in the October version, and some aspects of coverage also differed eight issues common to both studies were rising prices (questions 14A-15c), strikes (questions 16A-16E), pensions (questions 17C,D), British membership of the Common Market (questions 20A-20J), nationalisation (questions 21A-21G), social services and benefits (questions 22A-f), wage controls (questions 23A-C), and in Scotland 'C' series, devolution (question 26K-P) The issues covered only in October were unemployment (questions 17A,B), housing (questions 17E,F), North Sea oil (questions 19A-H), and, in Scotland 'C' series questionnaires, the Scottish Assembly (questions 260-T) The miners' strike, taxation, and Communist influence in the Trade Unions were examined in the Spring survey but not in October.

On most of the major issues five aspects were examined, the respondent's own view of what should happen, his view of how the parties' stood on the issue, the importance of the issue in his voting decision, his assessment of how well he understood the issue, and the party ne preferred on the issue. On some issues no disagreement on what should happen was expected, thus almost all people would accept the only policy for unemployment is to keep it as low as possible. On such issues the last three aspects were examined.

This major issues section was followed by two series of questions that The first (excluded from had no equivalents in the Spring survey the 'C' series questionnaire) evaluated respondents' political liberalism/ conservatism (questions 26A-J) by asking their reactions to specific changes that had been taking place in Britain, such as attempts to ensure equality for women, for coloured people, tighter police control of demonstrations, the reduction in Britain's military strength, etc The second series on a similar theme asked how much importance respondents felt should be attached to policies such as complete comprehensivisation, repatriation, and aid to developing countries (questions 27A-M). These two series of questions were followed by questions on the most important general aim of government, (questions 28A-C) and two questions on how much confidence can be placed in the likelihood of a party's doing in government what is 'right' (questions 29A,B) In place of the two series, the Spring questionnaire included a section on political perceptions of other countries, and one on interest groups in British government

The following section common to all questionnaires, both in Spring and in Autumn (questions 30-42), though with some alterations in the 'A' series, and some omissions in the February questionnaire, covered voting behaviour at the general election and political interest. The October additions examined the phenomenon of strategic voting - voting not for the first choice, but for another in order to keep out the last choice party. This led onto a section (questions 43-48) on general party support concluding with one final question on strategic voting (question 49)

These questions on general party support have been asked on every British Election Study panel since the study began in 1963. Questions 50A to 51C probed respondents' attitudes to coalitions as an issue in their voting choice. These had not been asked in February, whereas the following questions on the overall assessment of the main political parties and party leaders (questions 52A and B) had

A new section on political party membership, interest group involvement, and awareness of the winning party's and candidate's names (questions 53-58) appeared in the October questionnaire, and was followed by a general section on respondents' financial circumstances, their expectations (questions 59-66 and many not asked in February). A section on social indicators followed (question 67) in which respondents were asked how satisfied they were with their lives and jobs, with politicians in Britain today, and so on. The same question had been asked in February

In the next-to-last section (questions 68-74) questions were asked about trade union membership, social class identification and the party affiliation of respondent's father. All these questions had been asked in February, as had most of the personal identification questions in the final section, such as educational background (questions 75-77), tenure (questions 78-80), occupation, mobility, marital status, and income (questions 83-93, 95A,B). One series of questions on religious affiliation (questions 81-82), and one on children in the household (questions 94A-C) were added. Copies of the questionnaires used in the October survey are included in appendix 2.

LETTERS TO RESPONDENTS

Every respondent was snown a letter of introduction at the beginning of the interview 'A' and 'B' series respondents' letters were printed on British Election Study notepaper,, 'C' series letters on SCPR/British Election Study notepaper. Copies of the three letters used initially appear in the appendix

Towards the end of the fieldwork stage, when the response rates had stabilised, a second fieldwork stage was arranged (see section 4, p 17 below) and three letters ('A', 'B' and 'C' series) were printed for use at that stage. These stressed the importance of gathering everyone's views for the sake of accuracy, and emphasised confidentiality. Copies of these letters are also included in appendix 2.

4. THE ETELDWORK STAGE

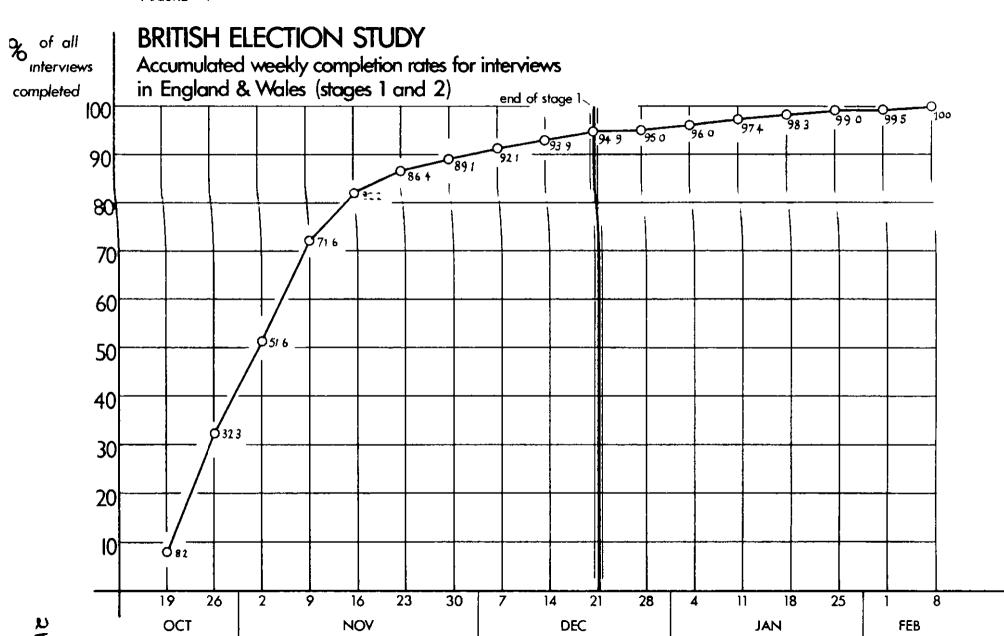

FIELDFORCE AND BRIEFINGS

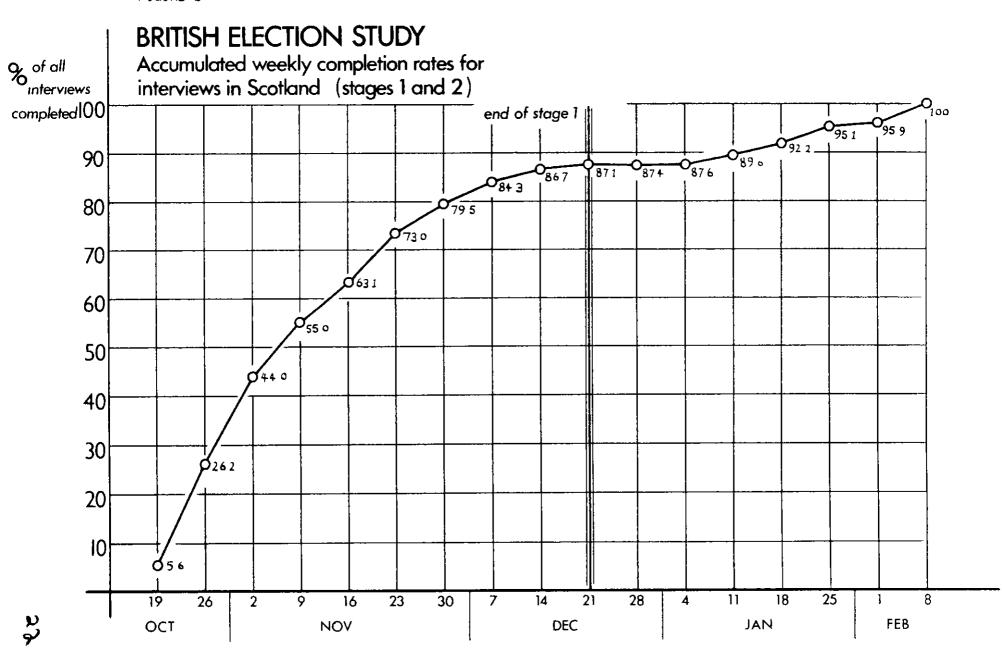

154 interviewers worked on the project and on average carried out 22 interviews each. The workloads varied from person to person, so that 32 interviewers (21 % of the fieldforce) completed 1442 interviews (43 % of the interviews), while another 60 interviewers (39 %) completed 574 interviews (17 %)

Workload.	Interviewers	Interviews	Average number of interviews per interviewer
31 interviews or more	21 %	43 %	45
15 - 30 interviews	40 %	40 %	21
Up to 14 interviews	39 %	17 %	10
Total numbers	154	3,334	22

136 interviewers on this study were personally briefed in eight day-long briefing sessions, three in London, one in Birmingham, one in Manchester, one in Leeds, one in Edinburgh, and one in Glasgow All these briefings took place in the week after the general election on Thursday, October 10, 1974. The 18 interviewers (12 % of the fieldforce) who were unable to attend the main briefing sessions were personally briefed at sessions arranged by Centre for Sample Surveys Ltd., which was responsible for the briefing and fieldwork, and conducted 10 % of the interviews.

At the briefing sessions, which were chaired by SCPR researchers and members of the British Election Study, the survey was introduced and briefly described, the sample was discussed, and the organisation of the interviewing and of the questionnaires was examined. The major part of the interviewing consisted of a trial interview, where interviewers were allocated sections to ask, in turn Points arising from the answers and recording them, difficulties of question layout and so on were discussed. Project instructions on these points were prepared for each interviewer working on the study

TIMING

The interviewing began immediately after the briefing sessions, and some interviewers were able to start on October 15. Throughout it was assumed that movers would be followed and interviewed, where possible. The first stage was completed by December 20, 1974. Figures 1 and 2 show the levels of completion by week over the period, and indicate that over 94% of all interviews in England and Wales and 87% of the interviews in Scotland had been completed by the middle of December 1974, and most of these had been conducted in the first month after the election.

Because the response rate was rather low in certain areas, a second stage was mounted, at which some first stage non-contacts were to be followed up and interviewed, if possible. A shortened version of the 'A' series questionnaire was prepared for 'A' series respondents who had refused at the first stage but had intimated that they might co-operate if the questionnaire was shorter

The second stage ran from November 26 till January 20, 1975. A brief third stage was mounted in January 1975 to boost the response rate among 'B' and 'C' series respondents using abbreviated 'B' and 'C' series questionnaires

QUALITY CONTROL

Most of the sample had been interviewed before or were to be visited again, and it was felt that the major quality control procedure should be postal checking rather than recalling on respondents, to avoid annoying panel members 1228 check cards were sent out to sample members and 568 replies were received, none unfavourable. A few interviewers were nevertheless accompanied by CSS field supervisors on a number of their calls

As a further quality check, all interviewers' first batches of work were checked by field assistants in the head offices in London and in Darlington Interviewers were informed of errors. Subsequently regular random edit checks were made on work by field assistants to ensure that high standards of completion were maintained.

RESPONSE

4,801 addresses were allocated at the beginning of stage 1, 2,467 'A' series, 944 'B' series and 1,390 'C' series 1,704 addresses in all were in Scottish constituencies and the remaining 3,097 were in England and Wales After stage 1, which ended on December 20th, 65 4 % of in scope addresses had provided interviews. The response rate varied by series so that 72 % of 'A' series, 54 % of 'B' series and 63 % of 'C' series addresses had been productive.

At the completion of stages 2 and 3, 56 addresses were found to be out of scope. The overall response rate was 74 7% In table 1 opposite the full analysis of response is given, with a separate analysis for England and Wales and for Scotland, where response rates of 74 0 % and 75 9 % respectively were achieved. The table shows that the major reasons for non-response were overt and covert refusal. About three quarters of all non-respondents refused an interview, broke appointments, or had someone else in the household refuse the interview for them

Tables 2 and 3 analyse the response within England and Wales and within Scotland by the questionnaire series. Both tables show that the 'B' series samples produced lower response rates than either the 'A' or the 'C' series samples, 63 % in England and Wales 'B' series and 69 % in Scotland compared with 78 % and 76 % for the respective 'A' series and 76 % for the Scottish 'C' series

The lower response rate in the 'B' series sample seems to have been due to at least three points

- 1) in practice, the 'B' series questionnaire took longer to complete than the pilot interviews suggested it would, on average it took about 85 - 90 minutes compared with the 80 minutes it was expected to take
- 2) the 'B' series sample consisted of new addresses drawn for the first time in October, and old addresses that had not provided an interview in February but were expected to in October These 'old' addresses provided for fewer interviews than the 'new' addresses as the table below shows.

Table 4 Respons	e rates within the 'B' ser	ries sample

No issued	801	143
Deadwood (demolished etc) 77	20
In scope addresses	724	123
% of productive interview (as % of in scope address		49 %

3) A higher proportion of 'old' B series addresses were issued in London than in other areas of the country. Interviewing conditions in London are more difficult than elsewhere in Great Britain

One recommendation that arises from this is that if differences in interview length do emerge, and are significant - say greater than 10 or so minutes - then interviewer payments should be increased for the longer interviews to reflect their greater length. If the study team and CSS had been aware of the difference - which did not emerge from the pilot interviews - 'B' series interviews would have been paid for at a higher rate than either 'A' or 'C' series interviews

RESPONSE AT STAGES 2 AND 3

At the end of stage 1, the non-response contact sheets were inspected and reissued if it was felt that interviews might be achieved with the named individuals. Most reissues were refusals, and the straight refusals were most difficult to convert, 82 % of 'A' series refusals, 80 % of 'C' series refusals and 94 % of 'B' series refusals not co-operating at the second or third stage. The categories of non-response that produced most productive interviews were 'no contacts', and 'named person away or ill (in hospital). Tables 5 - 7 inclusive detail the results of recalls at stage 2 by category of non-response at stage 1.

REGIONAL RESPONSE ANALYSIS

Variations of response rates were shown between different regions of the country, and within series. In 'A' series samples the range was between East Anglia with a response rate of 87% and Greater London where 69% of in scope addresses produced interviews. The variations in 'B' series new addresses response rates were greater, and East Anglia and Greater London again produced the highest and lowest of 87% and 43% respectively Table 8 gives the regional response rates in total and within series.

CODING AND ANALYSIS

SCPR's and CSS's responsibility for the October study ended with the delivery of completed questionnaires to the British Election Study at the University of Essex. When questionnaires were received from the interviewers, they were checked for correct serial numbers, dating, and signature and to see if they were complete. The few incomplete questionnaires were vetted for suitability for inclusion in the analysis.

Two procedures are involved in the coding being carried out by the university, one for precoded questions and one for open-ended questions

Most of the survey data is in the form of answers to precoded questions. The interviewer records the information either by circling a marginal code number or, occasionally, by putting a statement number in a marginal box. All the data are key-punched directly from the questionnaires without intermediate coding

The procedures for coding open-ended questions in the October study are expected to be very similar to those employed in February. Coding frames used in the February study appear in the appendix, they were established after trial coding of some 400 questionnaires. A supervisor and two coders were employed each coder coded at least 200 questionnaires, and all coders coded a 10% sample in common to establish reliability. Ambiguous responses were coded after discussion with the supervisor

The coding frames were organised around 8 main subject headings with enough detailed codes to allow flexibility in regrouping responses for analysis. The idiosyncracies of individual responses were not allowed for - for example, if a respondent mentioned something about Northern Ireland as a good result of the election, code 66 was entered, but no attempt was made to find exactly what the good result was. When analysed, the data obtained from coding will therefore reflect primarily the amount of attention paid to different matters. Coding frames are given in appendix 4.

THE CLASSIFICATION OF OCCUPATIONS

Answers to open-ended questions on occupational groups need special attention. As well as the precoded replies to questions on occupation, four classifications have been employed in recording the occupational data on our respondents.

The first and most detailed of these, classification by Occupation Unit Group, is described in full by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in Classification of Occupations (1970). The Unit Group classification consists of 222 categories, each of which groups occupations according to the 'kind of work done and the nature of the operation performed'. A further category is added for occupations inadequately described and therefore unclassifiable.

In principle, 'the nature of the factory, business, or service in which the person is employed has no bearing upon the classification of his occupation, except to the extent that it enables the nature of his duties to be more clearly defined', in practice the proviso is important. Some occupations are easily categorised on simple job description for instance, a lorry driver is coded 122, 'drivers of roads goods vehicles'. Generally, however, more information is required replies to a number of questions need to be considered. 'What exactly do you do in your job? In what industry do you work? Does your job carry any rank, title or grade?' and so on

Some Job designations cover a wide variety of occupations or Job processes. The term 'engineer', for example, may apply to a fully qualified professional with managerial responsibilities or to a semi-skilled shop floor worker; the index of the Classification of Occupations lists over 500 different types of engineers, and detailed descriptions are required if an occupation is to be coded correctly. 'Machinist', 'collector' and 'technician' are similar terms

The occupation questions for the October 1974 Election survey were framed with these problems in mind, after careful study of the OPCS Classification and after more than 2,000 questionnaires from the February survey had been coded. The interviewer's role in collecting this information is crucial, since it is not possible to devise questions for all situations. The importance of asking all the questions even when they seemed redundant was stressed at briefings and interviewers were encouraged to probe when they felt it necessary

The second classification used is Employment Status, which groups respondents into five categories as follows

- (1) self employed with employees
- (11) self employed without employees
- (111) managers
 - (iv) foremen/supervisors
 - (v) other employees

This classification is a simplified version of the OPCS Employment Status and OPCS guidelines and procedures have been observed in coding.

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys Classification of Occupations (London HMSO) 1970.

The modifications adopted involved collapsing some OPCS categories in the 'self employed with employees' and managers categories we do not subdivide to large and small establishments (In both cases, however, cross reference with the third classification, socio-economic group, would allow us to expand our categories to the full OPCS classification) The fifth category, 'other employees', collapses three OPCS categories (apprentices and trainees, family employees, and other employees)

A further modification concerns members of the Armed Forces No provision is made in the OPCS classification for coding the employment status of members of the armed forces, but we distinguish three status levels—officers are coded as 'managers' (iii), non-commissioned officers as 'foremen' or 'supervisors' (iv), and other ranks as 'other employees' (v).

The Socio-Economic Group Classification corresponds to categories devised by OPCS. In all there are 19 categories, plus one for those whose occupation is inadequately described, we have subdivided this last category into three probably middle-class, probably working-class, and unclassifiable. The full classification is as follows

- 1 Employers in industry, commerce, etc in non-agricultural enterprises employing 25 or more persons (1 1)*
- 2 Managers in central and local government, industry, commerce, etc. in non-agricultural enterprises employing 25 or more persons (1 2)
- 3 Employers in industry, commerce, etc in non-agricultural enterprises employing fewer than 25 persons (2 1)
- 4 Managers in industry, commerce, etc in non-agricultural enterprises employing fewer than 25 persons (2.2)
- 5 Professional workers self employed (3)
- 6 Professional workers employees (4)
- 7 Intermediate non-manual workers ancillary workers and artists (5 1)
- 8 Intermediate non-manual workers foremen and supervisors non-manual (5 2)
- 9 Junior non-manual workers (6)
- 10 Personal service workers (7)
- 11 Foremen and supervisors manual (8)

^{*}Figures in parentheses indicate OPCS codes

- 12 Skilled manual workers (9)
- 13 Semi-skilled manual workers (10)
- 14 Unskilled manual workers (11)
- 15 Own account workers (other than professional) (12)
- 16 Farmers employers and managers (13)
- 17 Farmers own account (14)
- 18 Agricultural workers (15)
- 19 Members of the armed forces (16)
- 20 Occupation inadequately described but probably 'middle-class'
- 21 Occupation inadequately described but probably 'working-class'
- 27 Unclassifiable

As the category headings show, the socio-economic group classification brings together various characteristics of the respondent's occupation and his/her employment status. For coding, the Socio-Economic Group classification combines the preceding two classifications once Unit Group and Employment status are established, the correct Socio-Economic Group is determined from the table in Appendix Bi in the Classification of Occupations.

Socio-Economic Groups 1-4 in our classification are partly defined by the number of people employed in the 'establishment' in which the respondent works. OPCS code from lists indicating establishment size prepared independently in economic censuses and supplied by the Department of Employment and do not ask the respondent to indicate the size of his establishment. Some discrepancy may therefore arise between codings as they would be assigned by OPCS and those assigned by us on the basis of the respondent's answers.

Our final classification, Social Grade, employs the categories devised by Butler and Stokes for the earlier studies of political change in this series, they are a modified version of the Market Research Society classification. The seven-fold classification, with the equivalent market research categories, is as follows

- (1) higher managerial or professional (A)
- (11) lower managerial or administrative (B)
- (111) skilled or supervisory non-manual (Ci)
 - (1v) lower non-manual (C1)
 - (v) skilled manual (Cii)
 - (vi) semi-skilled and unskilled manual (D)
- (vii) residual (E)

Coding procedures for this variable, which again makes use of Occupation Unit Group, are in the ICPR codebook for the (1969-70) "Study of Political Change in Britain" 2.3.

The same classifications have been applied to the occupations of husbands of married women respondents. Other occupational data recorded include the occupation of the respondent's father, from the February study, the previous occupation of women currently describing themselves as housewives, and past or present occupations of respondents' wives.

EDITING

Every questionnaire is edited before punching. Editing consists of.

- ascertaining that every ringed code is clearly distinguished, legible, and unambiguous,
- (ii) marking every question for which no code as been ringed (whether through omission or because of filtering) to provide a clear spacing guide for the keypunchers,
- (111) ringing the closest precoded alternative by interpretation of recorded comments (wherever the interviewer had not circled a code),
 - (1v) eliminating multiple codings (or uncoded multiple answers) generally by provision of codes not pre-printed on the questionnaire,
 - (v) transferring simple numeric answers into provided marginal boxes;
 - (vi) providing the keypunchers with a clear and unambiguous document

²Butler, D. and Stokes, D., Study of Political Change in Britain 1969-70, Codebook, Inter-University Consortium for Political Research, Ann Arbor, Michigan 1973.

³Kahan, M.J., Butler, D., and Stokes, D., "On the Analytical Division of Social Class", British Journal of Sociology, Vol.17, 1966.

All questionnaires were separately punched and verified Column guides for punching are printed on the questionnaires on approximately every other page. Any query was flagged by the keypunchers and subsequently amended. Our experience of this data preparation system with the February cross-section sample suggested that it produced good throughput with a low error rate. Wild code and consistency checks on the closed-ended data indicated an error rate of 1.6 errors per thousand cards, after verification.

ANALYSIS

The complete edited data set on card was then read to tape for analysis. The analysis variables are too many to enumerate here, no complex indices have yet been used. All the analysis variables were derived directly from the questionnaire

The data will be stored in the SSRC Survey Archive

6. GENERAL COMMENTS

PAID RESPONDENTS

In the first 1974 election survey 105 respondents were paid to co-operate Payment was decided upon only as a last move to boost the level of response Before the second survey it was decided to pay these respondents again, if they gave an interview. The response rate among paid respondents was a little higher than the overall response rate - 80 % as compared with 75 % For the problems and costs involved, payment would only be worth considering if the response rate remained low, despite all other measures, such as extra incentives for interviewers, attempting interviews with non-co-operants.

In the third stage of interviewing in January 1975 some 20 respondents were paid to co-operate, after all other entreaties had failed

INTERVIEWERS' REACTIONS

In general interviewers' reactions towards the questionnaire were favourable. Many of the interviewers had worked on the February 1974 reinterview survey of the 1969-70 panel and were familiar with the layout and the subject matter of the questionnaire, and the difficulty of interviewing on the survey. Compared with the first 1974 survey the more complicated design, and the longer questionnaires of the second general election study did pose extra problems, but most interviewers enjoyed working on the project. Some of those sampled did not like talking about politics and their political beliefs, and this is shown by the high proportion of first stage non-respondents who, despite an abbreviated 'A' series questionnaire for instance, refused to co-operate at subsequent stages of the survey. Because details of the refusal were noted on contact sheets, it may be possible to reach some qualitative judgement about the general political interest of some refusals.

You may remember that an interviewer working for the British Election Study at the University of Essex visited you after the last general election in February 1974. You very kindly agreed to talk to us, for which we thank you again. I hope you found it as interesting as we have found the results of the survey

One of the major objects of the project is to record the views of a sample of electors after each general election so that we can examine the same people's views at different elections. We have already prepared a brief report on the previous survey which we shall be sending you in the near future. Could you again spare about an hour of your time so that our historic record of these general elections is kept complete?

As before, the research is entirely impartial. It is being conducted by a university and is nothing to do with the government or any political party. Your name and address will be kept strictly confidential. No individual's answers will be identified.

Your assistance is particularly valuable since you were interviewed earlier this year on the earlier part of the study. I do hope you will agree to help us again on this most important study.

Thank you very much indeed for your help.

We have been given a grant by the Social Science Research Council, to conduct a major study of people's views about life in Britain today and their feelings about the two recent general elections.

We have successfully completed one survey after the February election, with the kind help of some 2,462 electors throughout Britain. We hope that you will help us on this second survey, as we feel it is extremely important that people have the chance to express their views on these matters We believe that the study will be of great interest and importance and its results will be made public in a book. A brief report on the first survey can be sent to you shortly, if you would like to have it.

This research is entirely impartial. It is being conducted by a University and has nothing to do with the Government or any political party. Your name and address will be kept strictly confidential. Every registered elector in Great Britain has had an exactly equal chance of being asked to give his or her views. It would be most helpful if you and all the others selected could agree to spend an hour or so being interviewed, in order to guarantee that the results are accurate and reliable.

The bearer of this letter is a specially trained interviewer from the Centre for Sample Surveys, authorised by us to assist us conduct our research.

Thank you very much for your help

We are conducting a major study of peoples' views about life in Scotland and their feelings about the two recent general elections We hope that you will be able to help us in our project, as we feel it is extremely important that people have the chance to express their views on these matters. We believe the study will be of great interest and importance, and its results will be made public as a book. It is likely to be the only historical record of the views of people in Scotland about the recent elections.

The research is entirely impartial. It is being conducted by a University with our help and has nothing to do with the government or any political party. Your name and address will be kept strictly confidential. Every registered elector in Scotland has had an exactly equal chance of being asked to give his or her views. It would be most helpful if you and all the others selected could agree to spend about an hour or so being interviewed in order to guarantee that the results are accurate and reliable.

An earlier survey in the study done in the whole of Great Britain has been reported on briefly already. If you would like it, we would be happy to send you a copy of that report in the near future.

The bearer of this letter is a specially trained interviewer from the Centre for Sample Surveys authorised by us to assist us conduct our research.

Thank you very much for your help.

A little while ago an interviewer called at your door to ask for your help again in the major study we are conducting about the 1974 British Elections. We have already been given assistance by over 1,350 people all over Britain who were also interviewed after the Election in February this year, as you were. But we need to be sure that this unique historical record which we are collecting really represents the views of a complete sample of the British people about life in Britain after the 1974 Elections. It is therefore very important that we should talk to everyone who has been chosen and who has been interviewed previously, whether or not they voted at the Elections. As you know, the questions ask your views about issues and do not have right or wrong answers.

It may be that the interviewer called at an inconvenient time or you feel that you do not have an hour or so to spare. If so please mention this to the interviewer when she calls as she has been authorised to ask you a substantially reduced number of questions. It really is important that we keep this historical record up to date

We can promise you faithfully that your answers will be treated in the strictest confidence. The results will be presented as summaries, and no details will ever be attached to individual's names or addresses.

One of our interviewers will call on you in the next week or so, and we very much hope you will see her. If you are busy when the new lady calls, please do not hesitate to ask her to come back at a more convenient time.

These interviews are conducted by the Centre for Sample Surveys Limited on behalf of an independent academic project which has been located at the University of Essex through a Social Science Research Council grant. If you should wish to have further information about our study, please feel free to write to any one of us. Also if you wish a report on some of the findings, please ask the interviewer to note your request when she calls.

Yours, on behalf of the British Election Study

A little while ago an interviewer called at your door to ask for your help in a major piece of research we are conducting. The assistance which has already been given by over 2,200 people all over Britain has been of very great help to our work. But we need to be sure that the historical record we are collecting really represents the views of a complete sample of the British people about life in Britain after the 1974 Elections. It is therefore very important that we should talk to everyone who has been chosen, whether or not they are interested in social and political issues, and whether or not they voted at the Elections. The questions ask your views about issues and do not have right or wrong answers

We would be most grateful if you too could spare about one hour of your time to help complete our research. The people we have already spoken to have found it both interesting and enjoyable

We can promise you faithfully that your answers will be treated in the strictest confidence. The results will be presented as summaries, and no details will ever be attached to individual's names and addresses.

On this card are listed some choices of opposite words or phrases, and I'd like you to say how much each one applies to different political parties.

SHOW CARD A. POINT TO OPTIONS ON CARD WHILE SAYING THE FOLLOWING:

The first choice is between 'keeps its promises' and 'breaks its promises'. You can say whether a party very much keeps its promises (POINT TO BOX 1), somewhat keeps its promises (POINT TO BOX 2), neither keeps its promises nor breaks its promises (POINT TO BOX 3), somewhat breaks its promises (POINT TO BOX 4), or very much breaks its promises (POINT TO BOX 5). Think of the boxes as a continuous scale from very much keeps its promises to very much breaks its promises.

NOW TAKE THE RESPONDENT THROUGH EACH OF CARDS A - H. FOR EACH CARD NAME THE PHRASES AT THE ENDS OF THE SCALE AND ASK THE THREE QUESTIONS:

On this card are listed some choices of opposite words or phrases, and I'd like you to say how much each one applies to different political parties.

POINT TO OPTIONS ON CARD WHILE SAYING THE FOLLOWING SHOW CARD A

The first choice is between 'keeps its promises' and 'breaks its promises'. You can say whether a party very much keeps its promises (POINT TO BOX 1), somewhat keeps its promises (POINT TO BOX 2), neither keeps its promises nor breaks its promises (POINT TO BOX 3), somewhat breaks its promises (POINT TO BOX 4), or very much breaks its promises (POINT TO BOX 5). Think of the boxes as a continuous scale from very much keeps its promises to very much breaks its promises

NOW TAKE THE RESPONDENT THROUGH EACH OF CARDS A - H. FOR EACH CARD NAME THE PHRASES AT THE ENDS OF THE SCALE AND ASK THE THREE QUESTIONS:

- (a) In which box would you put the Conservative Party?
