[adhoc]

Now a question about Members of Parliament. Some people believe an MP should be listening carefully to people in his or her constituency, and should always try to give the public the policies it wants, even if this goes against that MP's personal principles.

Others believe an MP is elected to stand up for what he or she believes in, and should always stay true to those principles even if this goes against public opinion.

What about you?

A product-oriented party argues for the policies it believes in, and sticks by them rather than changing what it stands for in order to gain support. A market-oriented party finds out what most voters want, and is willing to change what it stands for in an attempt to gain support.
