

21st Century Evangelicals

A snapshot of the beliefs and habits of evangelical Christians in the UK - Summer 2014

Are we good neighbours?

Research by the Evangelical Alliance

21ST CENTURY EVANGELICALS

What is a typical evangelical Christian? What contributions do they make to society? What do they believe? What is distinctive about their lifestyle? What opinions do they hold about the most pressing issues of the day?

These are just some of the questions that the Evangelical Alliance is exploring as part of an ongoing study into the beliefs, habits and practices of evangelical Christians in the UK. The answers will help Christian leaders and the Church at large to understand their social context, and to make more effective plans for mission and ministry in the world today.

In January 2011 our groundbreaking 21st Century Evangelicals research reported on our survey of more than 17,000 people. Since then more than 3,000 have agreed to join our panel. In partnership with seven other Christian organisations, we ask this panel questions on different themes to produce regular reports, and usually have more than 1,500 responses each time.

These are our reports so far, containing fascinating information on evangelicals' beliefs, opinions and experiences. We hope that you will find the reports interesting and that they will spark conversations and ideas.

“Once again, through precise analysis and helpful insight, the Evangelical Alliance has provided us with a reliable lens through which we can better understand the context in which we seek to serve – and so enabling us to focus with clarity on issues we should prioritise.”

“These are such fantastic little booklets, jam-packed with fascinating and thought-provoking information. We plan to encourage our cell groups to use them for prayer and discussion in the ‘witness’ section of their meetings, and to that end we are making a copy available for each church member, along with some discussion-starter questions and suggestions for prayer.”

Where you see these icons it will highlight a higher or lower than average response from those listed. 'Younger people' signifies a group born after 1980, with 'Older people' signifying those born before 1960.

This online survey was carried out in February 2014 and a total of 1,669 took part. Among these 1,497 self-defined as evangelicals and the statistics presented in this report are based on this group. More detailed information about the sample is available from g.smith@eauk.org

WHAT HAVE WE FOUND?

This research explores whether evangelicals are loving their neighbours, and how they relate to others both in their community and further afield.

Neighbours across the world

When asked “who is my neighbour?” Jesus responded with the story of the Good Samaritan who cared for someone who was not from the same people group as him. We’ve found a huge 43 per cent sponsor a child in a less developed country, and a third are actively involved in campaigning on an international justice issue (page 20). A quarter specifically support the persecuted Church, and development or overseas mission are the church projects evangelicals are most likely to be involved in. Almost half (46 per cent) say they regularly pray with others for international issues.

Time to consider: Would you say you are a good neighbour to people overseas?

Looking out for strangers?

It seems evangelicals look out for people. Almost half (48 per cent) recall having done an act of kindness to help a stranger in the past week – from one-off events such as redecorating someone’s home, to more regular acts including mentoring ex-offenders and providing emergency accommodation for the homeless. Even so, almost a quarter regret not helping someone they saw in need in the last week (page 9).

Time to consider: Do you look out for ways to bless strangers?

Should we know our next-door neighbours?

While Jesus’s command to “love your neighbour as yourself” does not specifically refer to our next-door neighbours, it is clear we are called to be a blessing to those around us.

But the reality is we may not even know the names of those who live beside us. Although two thirds of our panel think people in the UK are not as good neighbours as they used to be, most feel that despite the busyness of life it is still reasonable to expect you would know your neighbours well (page 12).

Time to consider: Do you know your next-door neighbours? Is it important to?

Do we know our neighbours?

More than 40 per cent know a neighbour well enough to trust them to look after their home. One in four are regularly supporting a neighbour who is lonely, frail or otherwise in need, while another one in four are actively welcoming newcomers to their area (pages 10-11). While it’s great that many are loving their neighbours in this way, just two per cent would turn to neighbours first for advice (whereas 65 per cent would turn to a church friend).

Two thirds say most of their friends are Christian, and another 22 per cent say at least half are. Our panel were also likely to have friends of the same ethnic group and social class as themselves (page 18). This indicates we may need to make more of an effort to have friends unlike us.

Time to consider: Are there ways you can get to know your neighbours more? Does anything hold you back?

Are we sharing our faith?

Virtually all of our panel said being a Christian was very important to their sense of who they are, and 80 per cent said it was the most important aspect of their identity (page 17).

Three-quarters have prayed for their neighbour in the last three months, with a third letting their neighbour know they were doing so. Almost two thirds have also made it clear to a neighbour in the last three months that they are a committed Christian (pages 10-11).

Time to consider: Do your neighbours know you are a Christian? How did/might they respond? How can you creatively show God's love to your neighbours?*

Do we care about our local communities?

Where we live obviously determines who our neighbours and local community will be. Most of our panel are happy where they live, with some adding that despite problems in their area they feel called by God to be part of that local community.

A massive 91 per cent say they vote in local elections, indicating a much higher level of engagement in local issues than the national average (35 per cent in 2014). Issues or social groups seen as important for Christians to prioritise locally include poverty, foodbanks, the elderly, youth, families and homelessness (pages 14-15).

More than a third are regularly joining with others to pray for their local community and the majority are involved in at least one church social action or community project.

Time to consider: How have you come to live where you do? Are you involved in the local community? Being honest, do you care about your neighbourhood?*

Is the Church involved in the neighbourhood?

We've discovered a wide range of community activities being run by churches, including money advice services, foodbanks, sports ministries, village shops and prayer rooms. Some churches are also partnering with secular and statutory groups to deliver services to the community, including youth work, social enterprises, lunch clubs and work with prisoners (pages 22-23).

It's great that a huge 82 per cent partner with other churches on projects or activities in their community – something the Alliance is encouraging through Gather, our network of unity for mission movements across the country (www.wegather.co.uk). But a much smaller proportion (34 per cent) partner with secular projects to serve their community.

Time to consider: Is your church actively involved in the wider community? Do you volunteer with a secular or church-run project? Would you consider volunteering with a secular project?*

Ways your church can encourage neighbourliness:

- Encourage people to get to know their neighbours and be generous to them
- Ask people to sign up to the Neighbourhood Prayer Network, which aims to see every street in the UK covered by prayer – www.neighbourhoodprayer.net
- Encourage people to use opportunities such as the Big Lunch to host parties on their street – www.thebiglunch.com
- Engage with the online community Streetbank which helps neighbours connect with each other – www.streetbank.com/church
- Visit the Contextual Theology Centre's online resources – www.theology-centre.org.uk

WHERE DO WE LIVE?

Which of the following best describes the place where you live?

Our panel is very much concentrated in London and the southern half of England (which is roughly in line with the UK population overall). Nearly two-thirds (63%) have lived in their locality for more than 10 years, and 40% for more than 20 years.

How long have you lived there?

- Less than a year
- 1-3 years
- 4-5 years
- 6-10 years
- 11-20 years
- More than 20 years

How much time do you spend in the immediate locality where you live?

- More than half of my waking time there
- Less than half of my waking hours there
- I only return there to sleep at night
- Other

It is relatively affluent but this masks significant problems with drug abuse, domestic violence, neglect, self-harm, low self-esteem and lack of hope.

Where do you tend to do each of the following activities?

I love living here - I know it is the place God has called me to in spite of issues and problems.

It is really striking that 63% (and 73% of younger respondents) say they need to travel well outside of their locality when visiting relatives who don't live with them (the rate for this was significantly lower in the north of England, Scotland, and Northern Ireland). This indicates a scarcity of extended families living near to one another, and is similar to the pattern in the wider population, particularly among the professional middle class. This emphasises the importance of local church communities who can fulfil the role of an extended family, providing emotional and practical support.

RANDOM ACTS OF KINDNESS

When did you last...?

On Sunday I prayed for a lady who was feeling lonely and she rested her head on my shoulder as I prayed. It can be simple.

Almost half (48%) can recall doing an act of kindness for a stranger in the last week, while only 21% recall receiving such an act.

Most can recall both offering and receiving an act of kindness from someone they know in the last week or so.

Regret for not helping someone when the opportunity or need arose appears to be slightly more common (23% in the past week) than getting involved in helping someone in a way that felt costly (20% in the past week). A significantly higher proportion of church leaders said they recently helped someone in a costly way.

After going through chemotherapy seven years ago I now visit three days a week and hope to encourage other patients coming through treatment.

What it means to be a Good Samaritan

*"To show compassion and be involved with individuals we meet on life's road, at their point of need."
 "To go the extra mile to look for ways to help rather than just responding to an obvious need."*

An elderly gentleman gave me his spare shopping bags at the supermarket when he realised I had none. He didn't speak English, just smiled.

I am a Street Pastor so have the privilege of coming across many people who could use a helping hand.

I take someone who might be lonely/hard up out for coffee or treat them to a meal out.

I see homeless people quite a lot near my workplace. Sometimes I give them food or money or stop for a quick chat, but more often than not, I walk by.

DO WE KNOW OUR NEIGHBOURS?

When did you last...?

I'd be happier if there was more of a community spirit here. There is mutual respect, but other people do not initiate anything and one doesn't want them to think that we are pushing Christianity as they all know that we are Christians.

I know God has brought me and my neighbour here, because she is seeking Him, and He is using me.

Within the last day
 Within the last week
 Within the last three months

It seems that the majority know at least some of their neighbours, with two-thirds stopping to chat with a neighbour in the last week, more than half welcoming a neighbour in for a drink within the last three months, and nearly half (secretly) praying for a neighbour in the past seven days.

In the last three months almost a third (31%) had prayed for or with a neighbour who was aware they were doing so, with 12% doing this in the last week. Very low numbers had complained to a neighbour or called the police to their street recently.

The community has pulled together very strongly over recent years to help local people affected by flooding.

I actively pray for my local neighbours and pray for opportunities to meet them, and use the local shops to build relationships. Friendliness is crucial to this.

In completing these answers I have learned how isolated I am and need to get to know my neighbours.

Who do you turn for help when...

You need advice or a listening ear

You need emergency services to your car (or bike)

You need someone to look after your home, your plants or your pet while you are away

A parcel is to be delivered while you are out

You lock yourself out and need to get a spare key

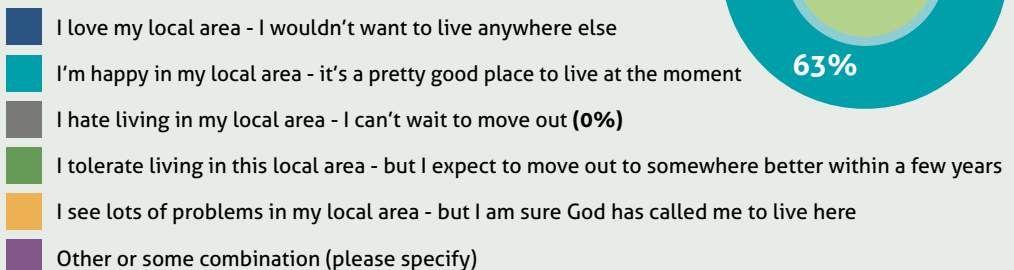

It seems that while many trust their neighbours to take in a parcel (86%) or look after a spare key (over 40%), very few turn to a neighbour when they need advice or a listening ear (2%, compared to 65% turning to a fellow church member).

Even though I'm wheelchair-bound, I know others less able than myself, so I call them and sometimes visit. I organise the neighbours' children, we bake and after school they pass through, tell me about school and even invite me to their school activities

Which of the following statements best describe your feelings towards the neighbourhood where you live?

The majority are happy living in their local area. Only 5% say they see lots of problems in their local area but feel called to live there – does this low figure indicate Christians are avoiding areas with lots of problems?

I'm actively involved in...

34%  Older people & church leaders

Praying regularly with others in my local community (not just in church services)

27%  Older people

Regularly supporting a neighbour who is lonely, ill or otherwise in need

25%  Older people

12%

A Neighbourhood Watch or other police and community group

 Older people, church leaders & people from London, the South-West and East Midlands.

More than a third said they often pray with others for their local community, and around a quarter are regularly supporting a neighbour in need or welcoming newcomers to their area. Much lower numbers are involved in clubs or community groups outside of church.

I think...

65%  Younger people

People in the UK are not such good neighbours as they used to be

61%  Men & Church Leaders

The only hope for any local community is to see large numbers of people converted to Christ and well established in local churches

45%

It's a bad thing that so many neighbourhoods are full of people of one social class, ethnic group or age group

36%

The main motivation for acting as a good neighbour is that people can have a chance to find out about Jesus

25%

In our busy society you can't expect people to get to know their neighbours very well

3%

I don't want the neighbours to get involved in my life – they should mind their own business

 Agree or Strongly agree

The nearest comparable national statistic is very similar – 29% in the government's citizenship survey said they help their neighbour by doing shopping, collecting their pension or paying bills.

I actually feel guilty that I don't have time for my own elderly mother and in-laws. I feel tired and overworked most of the time and have little energy left for the projects you talk about. In theory I know they are very important.

Almost two thirds (65%) feel that people in the UK are not such good neighbours as they used to be...

...but the majority believe in our busy society it is still reasonable to expect to get to know your neighbours.

I have found that the neighbours are not as friendly as when we lived in a less affluent area – apart from the next door folk who are lovely. Others are rather insular.

Michelle's story

Michelle Swallow's church in Bradford encourages people to get involved in meeting local needs. Michelle successfully stood as a Labour councillor in May 2012, and has been encouraged and supported by her church. She is enjoying blessing people around her, listening to what the community wants and helping in practical ways. She says: "I look at other Christians around and think 'why are they not all getting involved, putting their hand to the plough?' I'm an ordinary woman raising my family in the area – I never in a million years thought of myself as political! If more people stepped out in faith we would see God moving in ways never seen before."

WHAT MAKES US WHO WE ARE?

How important are each of the following to your sense of who you are?

Almost all of our panel (99%) say their Christian faith is very important to their personal identity, with family at a close second at 85%.

Social class, level of income and ethnic background were all much less important than the national average, and level of education, occupation and gender were also comparably less important.

In terms of geography, the UK seems to be important to our panel's sense of identity, stronger than any other geographical levels. Immediate residential locality takes second place and Europe is the least important of the options given.

Christians have to get out of their 'safe' ghettos (on the road to Samaria!) to befriend and help those in need, whoever they are.

How is it possible to love someone as yourself if you struggle to love yourself?

Despite being a village, our experience is that there is not much community. People are more likely to get in their car and drive to the city than interact locally.

I have chosen to be involved in non-church leisure activities so that I can be "salt and light".

“And who is my neighbour?”

Luke 10:29 NIV

To the surprise of those around him, Jesus welcomed every kind of person. Everyone was shown love and respect. And he told his followers to do the same.

He said, ‘Truly I tell you, whatever you do for one of the least of these brothers and sisters of mine, you do for me.’

Through developing the work of Prospects in the UK, Prospects is committed to:

- enabling more people with learning disabilities to enjoy wider acceptance and inclusion,
- delivering high quality care services and support, and
- more opportunities to share and experience God’s love in Christ.

“God doesn’t look at people as able or disabled – but as people. People made in the image of God, and people for whom Jesus died.”

We are looking for more care workers with a heart for providing Christian support

Involvement in local projects

I'm involved in a church project

I'm involved in a secular project

There is a local church project but I'm not involved in it

Lots more people were involved in church-run projects than secular ones.

As a church we encourage every member ministry so tend not to have many initiatives for the whole church.

The local council asks us to do things it cannot do itself, because it knows we will do it well.

Some 58% of our respondents said they were actively involved in at least one church social action or community outreach project. The most common types of projects were development or mission overseas, foodbanks or work with elderly people.

However only 21% were actively involved in a secular project or activity, among which work with people with disabilities or learning difficulties was the most common. (We must note this does not include people's involvement in social or community work through their paid employment)

Many of our respondents were involved in numerous different projects – the mean average number of church projects or activities was 1.57 projects. Church leaders tended to be involved in more projects (their average number was 2.6). The most commonly mentioned local church projects were foodbanks, youth work, Street Pastors and money/debt advice.

Most of the churches our panel attend partner with other churches on projects, both locally (82%) and overseas (75%). While partnerships with Christian organisations is also frequent (59%), only about a third go to a church which partners with secular charities or the local council. Combined with the low individual involvement in secular projects, this suggests that evangelicals are less likely to be involved in volunteering with non-Christians, preferring to work with other Christians in church-led projects.

AFTERWORD

When asked “which is the greatest commandment in the Law”, Jesus replied: “Love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your mind.” This is the first and greatest commandment. And the second is like it: “Love your neighbour as yourself” (Matthew 22:36-38).

This research, the latest in our 21st Century Evangelicals series, explores how we relate to others, both in our neighbourhoods and further afield, asking whether we as evangelicals really are loving our neighbours.

The findings present a mixed picture, with some remarkable illustrations of churches and individuals proactively building relationships in local communities and meeting people’s needs. But others admit they struggle to find time to relate with their neighbours, and regret not helping out when they’ve seen a need.

We’ve heard about the wide range of community activities being run by their churches, including money advice services, foodbanks, sports ministries, village shops and prayer rooms. Churches are also partnering with secular and statutory groups to deliver services to the community. It’s wonderful that a huge 82 per cent partner with other churches on projects or activities in their neighbourhoods – something the Alliance is encouraging through Gather, our network of unity for mission movements across the country (www.wegather.co.uk).

As we all continue to live out these commandments of Jesus, let’s be proactive about getting to know those around us and showing them God’s love. Turn to page five to see some suggestions of ways your church can encourage people to get involved in their neighbourhoods.
